

SUMMARY OBSERVATION
FOCUS ON THE LEARNER, THE LEARNING PROCESS , AND THE LEARNING ENVIRONMENT

CLASS OBSERVED: English 9 (American Literature) Grade 9 DATE: August 18, 2026
NAME OF THE TEACHER: Mr. Vic Magara
NAME OF THE OBSERVER: Mr. Kenn Arcenal

LEGEND: VE – Very Evident; ME- More Evident; E-Evident; NE-Not Evident; NO-Not Observed

INDICATORS	VE	ME	E	NE	NO
FOCUS ON THE LEARNER
1. Learners are prepared and ready to engage in the lesson.		✓
2. Learners actively participate in individual and group activities.	✓
3. Learners interact respectfully and collaborate with classmates.	✓
4. Learners exercise critical thinking by asking and answering meaningful questions.		✓
5. Learners display appropriate behavior during activities and transitions.		✓
6. Learners demonstrate motivation and interest throughout the lesson.	✓
7. Learners connect lesson content to prior knowledge and real-life situations.		✓
8. Learners show evidence of understanding through outputs or performance.	✓
9. Learners respond positively to teacher feedback and guidance.	✓
10. Learners practice inclusivity and respect for diverse perspectives.		✓
FOCUS ON THE LEARNING PROCESS
1. Teacher explains lesson purpose or connects lesson to prior knowledge.	✓
2. Teacher provides preparatory activities to ensure learner readiness.	✓
3. Teacher organizes lesson logically with a clear beginning, development, and closure.		✓
4. Teacher uses varied and appropriate teaching-learning strategies.	✓
5. Teacher employs differentiated activities to address learners’ needs and levels.			✓
6. Teacher integrates instructional materials and technology effectively.	✓
7. Teacher asks purposeful and higher-order questions.	✓
8. Teacher uses effective verbal and non-verbal communication strategies.		✓
9. Teacher gives timely and constructive feedback.	✓
10. Teacher provides opportunities for reflection, synthesis, and transfer of learning.		✓

INDICATORS	VE	ME	E	NE	NO
FOCUS ON THE LEARNING ENVIRONMENT
1. Teacher establishes a safe, secure, and orderly learning environment.		✓
2. Classroom arrangement supports interaction, collaboration, and visibility.		✓
3. Learning environment promotes fairness, respect, and care.	✓
4. Classroom climate encourages active participation and cooperation.	✓
5. Teacher manages learner behavior through proactive and positive discipline.		✓
6. Teacher implements routines, rules, and procedures consistently.		✓
7. Learning space is inclusive and responsive to learners with diverse needs.			✓
8. Teacher prepares and arranges learning materials to create a supportive and organized learning environment.	✓
9. Lesson time is maximized with smooth transitions between activities.		✓
10. Teacher fosters a positive and motivating atmosphere for learning.	✓
Strengths Noted (What specific teacher actions or classroom practices stood out as effective, but may not have been captured fully by the checklist?) What stood out most was how faithfully the teacher carried out the learning plan while keeping the class motivated. As the plan intended, he opened with the daily Speak-UPp routine, stated the learning objectives and success criteria at the start, and unlocked key ideas before the discussion. The teacher then divided the class into four groups, assigning one stanza of the poem "invictus" to each, and provided task sheets, Manila papers, and markers so the learners could analyze their stanza and create a symbolic illustration of its meaning. A timer and clearly presented rubrics also kept the fifteen-minute task focused. Throughout the lesson, he showed genuine mastery of the poem, spoke in clear and audible voice with a strong command of English, and kept giving well-timed clues and hints that provided scaffolding for the learners to analyze each stanza on their own. His use of technology was also precise and purposeful, with readable slides, large text, and short animation and video clips, and he consistently asked follow-up, higher-order questions after each group presented. Above all, the focus of the lesson, which is valueing other people and their cumstances came through naturally in the discussion, which the collaborative, creative task made lively and personal.
Points for Improvement (What opportunities for better teaching or learning did you notice that were not reflected in the indicators?) A few opportunities for improvement may be considered by the teacher. Firstly, the background music played during the group work was a little loud an, at times, competed with ther learners' discussion. Secondly, while one group presented, some members of the other groups were still finishing their illustrations and di not dully attedb to the presenter, so the sharing was not always heard by everyone. Thirdly, the teacher sometimes pointed at learners instead of calling them by name, which slightly felt a little authoritative. Fourthly, most of the questioning came from the teacher; the learners them-selves raised only a few questions of their own, even the activity aimed to build critical thinking. Final-ly, the group tasks were the same for every group with little difefrentiation, and the individual "Quote Spotlight" refrlctionrisked being moved to homework rather than processed in class, which could limit how deeply the learners transfer the poem's message to their own lives.

Additional Observations

(Anything unique, noteworthy, or surprising about the learners, process, or environment that should be recorded?)

What I found noteworthy was how much the text itself energized the class. Since Invictus speaks about resilience and being the "master of one's fate", the learners connected quickly to the theme and related it to their own struggles, which make a literature-analysis task feel more personal rather than purely academic. The symbolic illustrations were a creative and revealing way for each group to showcase their understanding of an abstract stanza, and it was clear the learners took pride in explaining their artwork. I also noticed that they consistently expressed themselves in the target language during the sharing, and that the pairing and grouping encouraged even the quieter students to contribute to their group's output.

Insights as a Future Teacher

(What personal realizations or takeaways did you gain from this observation experience?)

This observation taught me that a well-prepared lesson plan and a warm, engaging delivery are not separate things. The teacher's clear targets, supplementary and prepared materials were exactly what freed the learners to think, create, and enjoy the lesson. I realized that literature comes alive when learners are asked to make meaning collaboratively and creatively, rather than simply being told what a poem means. At the same time, I saw that small details matter: the volume of background music, making sure peers actually listen during presentations, and calling students by their names can quietly shape how safe space and connected a classroom feels. I was reminded, too, that good questioning must go both ways. As a future teacher, I want to model higher order thinking but also deliberately invite learners to ask their own, since that is where real critical thinking begins. Watching how naturally the values of resilience and respect were woven into the lesson reminded me that content and character can be taught together. Most of all, I left the observation convinced that my task will be to prepare carefully, teach humanly, and keep refining small things in order for every learner not only engaged but genuinely reached.
